THE 60-SECOND BRIEF

International Buyers

Test one cross-border buyer journey before launch.

For whom

Project or agency teams with a defined cross-border target market.

When to use it

The ad is translated but language support, time zones, visits and process questions are unresolved.

Tool inside

A target-market matrix with owners and a list of questions for specialists.

Your result

See which step must be resolved before promoting the offer.

DECISION SCENE · ILLUSTRATIVE

Translation does not make a journey serviceable

A team runs an English ad for an Austrian development. A buyer in its chosen market asks in the evening about visits, documents and the purchase process. The ad reads well, but nobody owns the reply and the process information has not been checked.

Decision for the team

Select one market. Confirm who will reply in which language, when visits can happen and which questions need professional advice. This guide does not promise NovaLure operational support in any market or language.

WHERE THE JOURNEY BREAKS

Four transitions. Four visible signals.

01 Presentation → enquiry

Warning sign: The ad is translated; documents or pricing remain unexplained.

02 Enquiry → triage

Warning sign: Intended use and travel window are missing.

03 Triage → follow-up

Warning sign: Response hours ignore the time zone or preferred channel.

04 Follow-up → handoff

Warning sign: Specialist process questions have no owner.

DECISION RULE

Review a market, not a vague international segment

Language and channel

Confirm working language and available support in writing. A PDF language is not a service promise.

Visits and decisions

Record time difference, travel planning and decision participants as practical questions.

Specialist matters

Route finance, tax, legal and remote completion questions to qualified people; avoid universal answers.

QUICK EXERCISE

One journey, five test questions

Use your actual target market. Walk through one enquiry from ad to handoff. Ask a colleague to use only the matrix to answer: who replies and when, what goes out, who handles specialist questions, when can a visit happen and what remains open?

SET PRIORITIES

A scorecard without false precision

Yes = 2 · Partly = 1 · No = 0. Add all five answers (0–10 points).

1. Is one target market specified?

□ 2 □ 1 □ 0

2. Is operational language support confirmed?

□ 2 □ 1 □ 0

3. Are channel, time zone and reply window defined?

□ 2 □ 1 □ 0

4. Are visit options and documents ready?

□ 2 □ 1 □ 0

5. Are specialist questions, owner and next date recorded?

□ 2 □ 1 □ 0

0–3: fix the missing handoff first

4–7: test one bottleneck and measure again

8–10: keep the process; inspect exceptions

ONE SEVEN-DAY IMPROVEMENT

Improve one question. Then check.

Day 1

Team lead names one market and a real enquiry route.

Day 2

Sales confirms language, channel and reply hours with its owners.

Days 3–4

Project team checks documents and lists specialist questions.

Days 5–7

Run a test enquiry and fix one missing step.

Visible output: a completed matrix, a tested reply route and a list of unresolved specialist questions.

DECISION SCENE · ILLUSTRATIVE

Ad versus buyer journey

Illustrative: A translated ad names location and price. A localised journey adds a clear brochure, confirmed working language, reachable reply hours, visit options and a route for finance, tax and legal questions. Qualified specialists provide those answers according to the buyer and property jurisdictions.

For your team

FOR YOUR NEXT TEAM MEETING

Start with three questions.

01

Choose one specific market instead of an undefined 'international' audience.

02

Confirm language support and ownership before running a campaign.

03

Route specialist questions and record the next appointment.

NEXT STEP

Request a 30-minute Project Check

Bring a project page or anonymised enquiry and your current handoff route. We will examine one transition and give you a prioritised next action. No sales result is promised.

Your ten-minute result

The worksheet works without NovaLure. A Project Check is an optional way to review the full journey.
